Arches

During the study of “Kleiner, Fred S. Gardner's Art Through the Ages: The Western Perspective. 16th ed., vol. 1, Cengage Learning, 2016.” We learned about three types of arches: the Porta Maggiore, Arch of Titus, and Arch of Constantine. The Porta Maggiore was built in Rome, Italy during 50 CE. It also provided support for the two waterways of two aqueducts. It also served as a huge gateway. Porta Maggiore used rough edged rocks mostly rather than using perfectly cut rocks. So it used the design called roman rusticated, which means like rough surface of kind of like low/high relief. This made the design more unique.

Secondly came the Arch of Titus; it was also built in Rome, Italy after 81 CE. Compared to the last one this one tells a story. Domitian got this arch built to honor his brother, the emperor Titus. The Arch was built to celebrate the The Arch of Titus; it celebrated the victories of the emperor Titus. Unlike the Porta Maggiore arch this only had one gateway and it also had like relief statues and paintings telling stories about the victories. For example the two of the reliefs on the arch of titus one of them is called “Spoils of Jerusalem, relief panel in the passageway of the Arch of Titus, Rome, Italy, after 81 ce.” The other one is called, “Triumph of Titus, relief panel in the passageway of the Arch of Titus, Rome, Italy, after 81 ce.” So this was not just a gateway or was made for a purpose as a waterway, instead it was like a memorial to remember the emperor titus and his accomplishments.

Finally, The Arch of Constantine was built from 312 to 315 CE. It is also located in Rome, Italy. One difference in this arch and other is that this arch had statues or reliefs were recycled and were used on this arch. Instead of the usual dual or single gateway this included 3 passageways. One example of relief made on this arch is “Constantine distributing largesse, detail of the north frieze of the Arch of Constantine, Rome, Italy, 312–315 ce. This piece is for showing people rather than telling a story. Some experts think it reused the sculptures/relief, it was like a try to connect Constantine as a good emperor. Because it was unique using art from the past and created uniquely it also helps art progress into the middle ages.
