Strengths

One of my strengths is working independently. It really comes in handy when you are in college. There are many benefits to working independently because, in college, you have to work on most of the assignments independently, and most of your studies are mostly independent. You go to class and listen to the professor with a lot of people in the classroom, more than in casual high school classes. In college, you will also have to create your schedule, which will work for you. You will have a job, and you will mostly be independent of yourself. You will have more responsibility for things like money management, spending wisely, managing your home, and taking care of yourself.

Mental preparedness is really important to have because your mental health plays a big role in how you do your things in college life. You have to be mentally prepared in order to work independently. If you are mentally prepared, that is the only way to be able to work independently. In order to prepare yourself mentally for life and college, you can start with a positive mindset. When you have a positive mindset, you can conquer more challenges that come into your life. A positive mindset will help you improve your focus and keep you motivated to move forward even when you are overwhelmed by many problems. In college, you will have to adapt to many different situations and changes in life. But being mentally prepared is really important. Self-care is also as important as mental health because, when your body is healthy, it will keep your mind free of worries.

Weakness

One of my greatest weaknesses is time management. But I have actively tried to improve my time management skills. But every time I try to get organized for time management, it doesn't work out. So I think my schedule is more organized when I am not doing time management. I am the kind of guy who likes to plan along the way. I have tried using a planner and many time management apps, but it never worked out. So now I hate scheduling, because first you waste your precious time on a time management schedule. For example, when I was in middle school, we had to do something like an outline of the essay that we were going to write, so I planned out the whole essay, did the whole outline, and got the grade for it. But then, when I tried to write the essay, it was hard so I just writing the essay out of the outline and I finished it. But it was not even close to the outline that I had created. So then I learned that time management is not a thing for me. My second weakness is that I am not too great at taking notes. I have tried taking many types of notes, both digital and physical. On the digital notes, I tried it in middle school. So with that, when I came home from school, I tried writing notes on that on my computer, and I did it for a day or two, but then I got bored with it and didn't do it again. I even tried taking the notes for that day on my phone because it was easily available and portable. But that didn't work out either. Following that, I attempted to take nice notes throughout class. I even colored the notes to make them look nice and arranged them according to sections and a table of contents. But it didn't work out. So now it is one of my weaknesses. But it's not horrible, though.
